	Claims	NO
Inventive step (IS)	Claims 1-22	YES

Industrial applicability (IA)	Claims 1-22	YES

2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

Prior art, cf. US2547275, is a device for the production of multilayer, coextruded tubular pre-forms made from thermoplastic, using a coextrusion head with a plurality of substantially coaxially arranged flow channels, each supplied by a single inlet opening with a melt of the material, the melt being distributed annularly in a distribution ring and flowing along the course of a truncated-cone ring, where the melts of the material flow into an annular common flow channel widening in the manner of a funnel, with an annular buffer space in which an indexable annular piston can be moved back and forth, and with, attached to the annular buffer space, an annular discharge channel with a isolatable annular die gap.

The problem addressed is achievement of uniform flow of the melt of the material from each inlet opening to the end of each flow channel, cf. reply letter of 26.01.2006, page 2, paragraph 1.

The solution, according to the characterizing part of claim 1, is that, when a longitudinal section through the coextrusion head is viewed the gap width in each distribution ring is greater in the region of the inlet opening than the gap width in the region of the side opposing the inlet opening, and that, where a longitudinal section through the coextrusion head is viewed, the gap width in each flow channel in the region of the inlet opening is smaller than the gap width in the region of the side opposing the inlet opening.

The combination of features according to the solution in claim 1 is not known from the prior art. No document reveals the decisive combination of distribution rings and flow channels, with gap widths decreasing in the direction of melt flow. No indications of the solution of the fundamental problem are therefore available for a person skilled in the art.

Claims 2-22 are dependent on claim 1 and therefore likewise meet the PCT requirements for novelty and inventive step.
